Colorado Rural Health Center Enters Partnership with Cyberscience Corporation

The Colorado Rural Health Center (CRHC) today announced partnership with Cyberscience Corporation, one of the world's leading business intelligence solution providers.

Denver, Colo – The Colorado Rural Health Center (CRHC), the state's primary rural healthcare association, announced it entered a partnership with Cyberscience Corporation to bring clinical and business intelligence to CRHC members. The agreement paves the way to offer Enterprise Cyberquery (eCQ) to nearly 200 rural healthcare provider members and affiliates of CRHC.

Cyberscience is a business intelligence company supporting a wide array of industries, including manufacturing, finance, and healthcare. The company was founded in the mid-70s with operations in North America, Europe and Australia and is committed to ongoing research and development, software support, and training.

According to Michelle Mills, CRHC's chief executive, Cyberscience was selected to ensure that CRHC members have access to innovative health care technology, specifically solutions that better enable the facility's health information technology to function appropriately and maximize value – for both the facilities' reporting needs and the patients' overall care.

“As healthcare facilities strive to sophisticate their health information technology solutions, our agreement with Cyberscience will afford rural facilities the ability to drive business via Cyberquery’s query and production reporting,” says Mills.

“Cyberquery will allow healthcare administrators to break their data barriers, and make productive, informed decisions,” Mills adds.
