Dr. Bill Troup of Walsh, Colorado Recognized as “Real Doc Hollywood”

In rural communities across America, health professionals are dedicated to providing high quality innovative health care.

Denver, Colo – In honor of the fifth anniversary of National Rural Health Day, celebrated November 19th, the National Organization of State Offices of Rural Health (NOSORH) published a series of Real Doc Hollywoods and Community Stars to highlight just a few of the healthcare providers and programs around the country who have made a positive impact on health in their local community.

Being a rural doctor, Dr. Troup knows firsthand the challenges and rewarding aspects of practicing medicine in rural areas. He urges the next generation of healthcare providers to become part of the community and chose practicing medicine as a lifestyle, not just a job.

When asked about being a rural doctor, Dr. Troup says, “The best thing about working in rural health is the personal connection with my patients. They are like family.”

Colorado’s rural communities are full of amazing stories of individuals and organizations doing amazing things.
